MA THESIS (a.k.a. TRABAJO DE FIN DE MÁSTER, OR TFM)

The 20-credit MA dissertation (a.k.a. Trabajo de Fin de Máster, or TFM) is a compulsory module in our MA programme. Each student must decide on the topic and negotiate with a professor to be his or her supervisor.

This guide contains information on each of the available research lines, and the professors who are responsible for them (see the corresponding section below).

First, each student will need fill in the MT supervisor assignment form that is available in PRADO to apply for the supervision of the instructor(s) of their choice. It is highly recommended to discuss the contents of the MT supervisor assignment form at least with the first prospective instructor selected for the task. There are two deadlines to complete and upload this application: 30th November 2024 and 15th February 2025.

Next, the Supervision agreement form will have to be filled in by the student, under the advice of the professor. This document, signed by the student and the professor, must be uploaded to PRADO before 28th February 2025.

Students must upload the final version of their MA Thesis to PRADO and send a copy to their supervisor. The coordinator forwards an electronic copy to each member of the evaluation committee, but if any of the members of the evaluation committee prefer a printouts rather than an electronic document, the student must provide them, according to each evaluator's preference.

The MA dissertation must have an extension of 10,000 - 15,000 words (excluding notes and references). A word count must be included after the main body of the text, and before the bibliography. MA theses that do not meet this requirement will be rejected.

The subject of your MA dissertation and the way it is approached should result in a reasonably original contribution to the field. The choice of subject, and the methodological approach to it, must be clearly and properly justified in the dissertation, and they must also be discussed during its public defence.

The MA dissertation must focus on a specific topic that must be dealt with a reasonable degree of depth and detail. It is therefore not a good idea to choose subjects that are too generic. For example, titles such as "William Shakespeare's Plays", or "Methods for Teaching English as a Second Language" are too generic, and they are such wide-ranging topics that trying to deal with them in a 10,000 – 15,000-word essay would lead to an extremely shallow MA dissertation.

Your MA dissertation must also be properly and clearly structured. It should consist of an abstract, introduction, development of the central subject (e.g. methodology, analysis and discussion), conclusions and references (plus appendixes if necessary).

The ideas, and the analysis that you propose in your MA dissertation must be properly argued, founded upon empirical evidence first, and also supported with secondary bibliography.

Your conclusions should result from a close reading and/or analysis of your subject, primary texts, corpora, or any other empirical object that may constitute the focus of your research.

You are also expected to consult secondary literature, but your final analysis must result first and foremost from a close study and evaluation of the primary object of research, and never from a simple summary, or just a miscellany of critical opinions culled from secondary literature.

It is, however, very important to be aware of the state of the art in the field and the subject you are working with. This should always be your starting point. In this regard, the introduction to the MA dissertation should in many cases consist of a brief survey and a critical account of the current state of the field, and its relevance for the topic of research you are about to focus on.

See appendix 1 for more specific rules concerning your MA Thesis.

The public defence of the MA dissertation before the evaluation committee should consist of an up to 20-minute presentation, during which the student must provide a brief account of the methodology, objectives, and results obtained in the process of elaboration of his/her MA dissertation. This presentation should never consist of a mere summary of the contents of the dissertation. After this presentation, the members of the evaluation committee will comment on the dissertation, and they may also pose questions for the student about its methodology or contents.

The mark for your MA Thesis will not appear on your records until you have passed all your other courses.

Plagiarism

We have a very strict policy against plagiarism. Those students who plagiarise in any of their essays or in their MA dissertation will be liable to a variety of disciplinary measures that range from a delay in the presentation of their MA dissertation to expulsion from the programme and the University of Granada. According to Article 15 of the Evaluation and Grading Regulations of the University of Granada, plagiarism, understood as the presentation of work done by another person as their own or the copying of texts without citing their source and presenting them as their own elaboration, will automatically lead to a mark of 0 in the subject in which it had been detected, regardless of the rest of the grades that the student would have obtained.

In line with these regulations, it is necessary to clarify that, as with any other type of plagiarism, the breach of the commitment of authorship by the student who delegates the completion of tasks in non-human resources (for example, computer applications of Artificial Intelligence) will also lead automatically to fail the subject, as well as to the disciplinary responsibilities that this action may entail.

OTHER

I have edited a volume of Selected Stories by celebrated Oriya poet, playwright, fiction writer JP Das (Har-Anand: New Delhi, 2012), and three anthologies of the short fiction of Gopinath Mohanty Dark Loneliness, and Ubiquitous Ants and Voracious Goats (Grassroots, Bhubaneswar, Orissa 2012) and Between Worlds. Eleven Stories. (New Delhi: Thomson Books, 2018). A chapter on Hemingway’s reportage of the Spanish Civil War appeared in Writers of the Spanish Civil War. The Testimony of their Auto/Biographies. Ed. Celia Wallhead (Bern: Peter Lang, 2011), pp. 137-8). Another chapter on the reportorial method of Martha Gellhorn’s dispatches of the Spanish conflict appeared in the second volume More Writers of the Spanish Civil War. Experience Put to Use (Bern: Peter Lang, 2018, 286-316).

My current research interests are centered upon diaspora and memory, more specifically (though not exclusively) on immigration stories and the disjunctions of memory frames (“unhomely moments” and clashes between the pedagogical and the performative) in transnational literature. I am also happy to supervise postcolonial literature and/or diasporic writer’s autobiographies and memoirs.

I became the 2018 recipient of the Saraswati Samman Award for my translation of Fakir Mohan Senapati’s novel Six Acres and a Third into Spanish. My translation of Gopinath Mohanty’s masterpiece, Paraja, was published in 2023 (Madrid: Punto de Vista Editores).

Research

Terminology and Knowledge Engineering

In the last decades, both terminology and terminography have been enriched by collaboration with knowledge engineering. If terminological research has been crucial to the understanding of the processes involved in the production and standardisation of specialised lexica, knowledge engineering has been particularly useful for the design and creation of machine-readable models for formalising world knowledge and emulating human reasoning. This line of research concentrates on the role of terminological work in the construction of domain-specific ontologies and the representation of specialist knowledge.

Applied Linguistics to Professional and Specific Discourses

This line of research offers a multi-perspective approach to the study of professional, domain-specific discourses. While it mainly draws on the tenets of genre theory and discourse semantics, it also nurtures from the theoretical and empirical foundations of applied linguistics, cognitive linguistics, corpus linguistics and ontological engineering.

Cross-cultural Business Communication

This line of research focuses on English as the international lingua franca and, consequently, cross cultural business communication is frequently conducted in English all over the world, regardless of the country of origin. This type of communication can be defined as “a process of exchanging, negotiating, and mediating one's cultural differences through language, nonverbal gestures, and space relationships.” In business, cross-cultural communication plays a critical role in successfully carrying out business with team and stakeholders in other areas of the globe. In effective communication, however, you can also unintentionally offend, confuse, or send a misconstrued message which could lead to broken relations with customers, partners, vendors, and employees.

OTHER

- I propose studying women writers as a pedagogical framework that fosters student autonomy and meaningful engagement. Central to this approach is the freedom granted to students to select an author whose work aligns with their personal interests and academic objectives. While this approach enhances motivation and investment in the learning process, empowering students to take ownership of their educational journey, it may also present challenges, such as ensuring a balanced representation of authors. These challenges can be addressed by providing a diverse range of authors for students to choose from and by encouraging open discussions about the selection process.

Specifically, I suggest a focus on the cultural dissemination of novels written by women in the English language, with particular attention to how these works have been received, reinterpreted, and extended by contemporary readers and audiences. Students are not just passive learners, but active participants in this process. They are encouraged to select a woman writer, analyse one of her novels, and examine any literary continuations or reinterpretations—such as sequels, retellings, or adaptations—that engage with the original work.

A wide and diverse range of authors can be considered, including but not limited to Jane Austen, the Brontë sisters, Louisa May Alcott, Daphne du Maurier, Agatha Christie, and Margaret Atwood. This diversity is not just a suggestion, but a fundamental aspect of the proposed framework. Furthermore, I propose the inclusion of cinematic and television adaptations as an integral part of the study, allowing students to explore the transformation of literary texts across media and to critically assess the cultural and ideological implications of such adaptations. This interdisciplinary perspective offers a rich, dynamic, and inclusive learning experience that foregrounds both literary heritage and its evolving reception.

Dr. Elisa SERNA MARTÍNEZ

Profesora Ayudante Doctora

I am keenly interested in new decolonial and feminist theories and their intersections with post-humanist thought. I am likewise drawn to non-canonical literatures that advance transnational feminist scholarship, whether through critical analysis or translation.

Research

- Caribbean & African Diaspora Literatures – creolisation, spirituality and intimacy in post-/de-colonial texts
- Gender, Body & Sexuality Studies – Black feminist / womanist / approaches to racialised and sexualised identities
- Feminist Translation & Interpreting – visibility, ethics and AI-enhanced practices for translating women's writing
- Trans-Atlantic Knowledge Circulation – posthumanist perspectives on cultural and technological flows

GUIDELINES FOR YOUR DISSERTATION (TFM) IN LITERATURE

Assessment Categories:

1.- Purpose, planning and problems of the thesis (10%)

- choice, specification of topic.
- presentation of problems and hypothesis.
- scientific significance and contribution of the thesis.

2.-Familiarization with literature (primary and secondary sources) (20%)

- knowledge of the subject area and critical use of sources
- definition and use of concepts

3.- Choice of research approach, methods and research frame (10%)

- suitability and use of methods

4. Analysis (30%)

- argumentative depth
- adequate use of evidence/citation

5.- Discussion and conclusions (15%)

- evaluation of the strengths and weaknesses of the research

6.- Structure and coherence of the thesis. (15%)

- Balanced structure, cohesion and coherence
- Linguistic form and final polishing of the text.
- Adequate list of works cited.

GUIDELINES FOR YOUR DISSERTATION (TFM) IN LINGUISTICS

Your final dissertation in linguistics will be assessed according to each of the following criteria on a 0-10 scale. Bear in mind that there are different linguistic traditions and approaches, so you are expected to follow the conventions used in your linguistic discipline.

A. FORMAL ASPECTS (40% of your final grade). In particular:

1. Structure, layout and formatting (10%): dissertation structure, inclusion of relevant sections, word length, quantity and quality of bibliographical references, formatting of quotations/references, appropriate use of table of contents/appendices/cross-references/etc.

2. Writing (15%): Clarity and quality of the language used (English). Command of the relevant technical terminology in the discipline. Coherence and cohesion. Argumentation.

3. Oral presentation (viva) (15%): Ability to effectively communicate linguistic ideas/problems/findings to a specialised audience in an articulated and coherent way. Correct use of the language (English).

B. CONTENT (60% of your final grade). In particular:

4. Framework, literature review and hypotheses (15%): Choice of the appropriate linguistic approach/framework. Ability to (i) critically review previous research, (ii) ask the relevant research questions and (if relevant) (iii) set up adequate hypotheses (or ask relevant research questions).

5. Design and method (15%): Ability to design and conduct an empirical linguistic project. Ability to choose and apply the relevant research method.

6. Data analysis, results, conclusions (15%): Appropriate (qualitative, quantitative or both) analysis of your data. Critical discussion and interpretation of your results and findings. Conclusions of your study.

7. Contribution (15%): Novelty/originality/contribution of your findings to the discipline.
